

As a small market radio station operator I am very much in favor of cleaning up the airwaves. I have been in radio for 40 years and I have always believed we as broadcasters have a responsibility to uphold certain standards. I admit that I have been shocked at what I hear on the radio when traveling to larger cities. I would be the first to agree that many stations are going way too far with their content. With that being said I would hope that the commission could consider finding an alternative to asking all radio stations to keep months of broadcasts audio on file. This would place a hardship on all broadcasters especially small market broadcasters even with today's recording technology. Maybe you could consider this requirement for stations that have received complaints about their content. Honestly I don't know of even one station in our small market that runs anything close to what most people would consider offensive. I thank you for your time and consideration.
